We read the Bible, and we know the Bible. The book never hides the human weakness of its heroes. We all have committed sins in our lives; they can be of various kinds, but nobody can deny it. Sin is a decision to do something God has forbidden, or not to do what God has commanded. We find jealousy raising its ugly head among the disciples in today's gospel. They want to domesticate God's liberating love and make themselves its sole distributors. The disciples even felt jealous of who was doing good. John reported to Jesus. It is interesting that it is John, the beloved disciple, the 'good boy' of the apostles – who raises this issue. Jesus warns us against a subtle temptation on the part of those evangelizing: to think and act as if they had the monopoly of all the good that is around them.

It is awesome to do good. We all want to do good but to see goodness in others or recognizing others doing good is not easy. The true follower must rejoice about all the good that is done around, even outside the church, without lessening his effort, so that the good that is being done may be done in Christ's name.

The road to tolerance begins within. If our prayers are principally aimed at getting what we want from God, we will be jealous of those who seem to have got more than us. But if we pray with open hearts – without words or images, just be present in thankful trust – we can become open people and can rejoice in the good done by others and to others.

A load of Blessings!

Fr. Robin Bashir
