Your support keeps Kansas City history alive

The Native Sons and Daughters of Greater Kansas City (NSDKC) continues an 80-year tradition of protecting and preserving the history of the Kansas City area through a commitment to action.

Highlights of these efforts:

- More than 100 cast metal markers have been placed throughout the Kansas City area to commemorate historic sites.

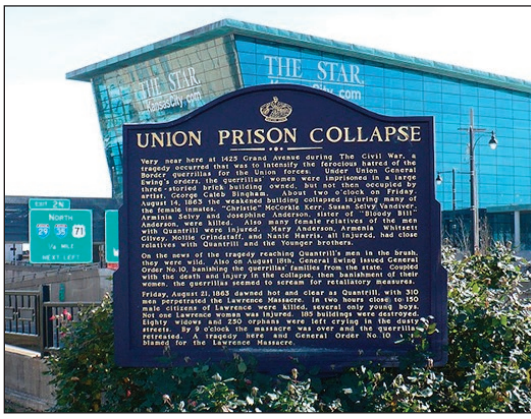
  In 2013 markers were placed at the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum and the American Jazz Museum.

- Eleven NSDKC Community Service Committees cooperate with area historic organizations to increase public awareness of significant landmarks, museums and cemeteries.

- Two Community Service Committees work with The State Historical Society of Missouri to maintain the NSDKC collection of documents related to the history of the Kansas City area.

- For more than 70 years the NSDKC has collaborated with Union Cemetery and Fort Osage to preserve these historic sites.

- The Native Sons and Daughters of Greater Kansas City has been a participant with local and national groups in undertakings to enhance the rich heritage of the Kansas City area. Among these endeavors are the expansion of the National World War One Museum at Liberty Memorial and the Town of Kansas pedestrian bridge and trail markers.



A marker at 14th Street and Grand Boulevard, between the Sprint Center and The Kansas City Star's Press Pavilion, designates a historic site in the midst of urban development. Placing markers to preserve the identity of historic sites in the Kansas City metroplex remains an ongoing goal of The Native Sons and Daughters of Greater Kansas City.

The Three Pioneers statue in Pioneer Park at Westport Road and Broadway Street was made possible through a cooperative venture between The Native Sons and Daughters of Greater Kansas City and the Westport Historical Society.
