

Values and Attitudes Workshop, by field

"This one day workshop is designed for disability support workers, but all associated with people with disabilities will be uplifted"

Workshop overview:

This one day workshop is designed for disability support workers to work together with the trainer to establish and explore a shared understanding of the values that underpin working in the disability sector and the attitudes required to perform their job.

These understandings will look at the difference between personal and workplace values, shared community values, laws and the expression of these in our work behaviour.

Who should attend:

This workshop is specifically designed for disability direct support workers. It will also be valuable for the supervisors and managers of those workers. Learning activities in the session assume participants are working directly with people with a disability.

Workshop content:

At the completion of the workshop, participants will:

- be able to list and describe the values of the community services area and particularly the disability sector.
- be able to give examples of behaviours that reflect these values
- recognise behaviours that don't support the values and suggest modifications to bring about change be able to describe the attitude required of disability support workers
- be able to demonstrate why sector values and positive attitudes are essential

A Certificate of Attendance is provided at the completion of the session to participants. This session compliments the nationally accredited units of competency, but it is not an accredited 'unit'.

LISA Comment: This is a not to be missed workshop for those who really want to provide real quality of life care for those with intellectual or multiple disabilities.

Having attended the first of its kind, last year, we can attest to this being an uplifting experience like no other! And, it's FREE.

Although these workshops are primarily intended for direct care staff, everyone associated with those in our society who's lifestyle is limited through intellectual or multiple disability, for whatever reason, will be empowered by the content and delivery of this workshop.
