Ancient Rome had a devotion to two sets of twins—Romulus and Remus, on the one hand, and Castor and Pollux, on the other.

They saw both sets as of divine origin. Romulus and Remus were the legendary founders of Rome, and Romulus (from whom the name of the City derives) slew his brother in a dispute over where the walls of the City should be. They are supposed to be descended from Aeneas, who fled from Troy after its conquest by the Greeks. They are abandoned at birth, but suckled by a she-wolf; there is an important statue of the wolf and the twins in the Capitol at Rome.

The Dioscuri, Castor and Pollux, also have their statues at Rome—at the top of the steep flight of stairs that lead up to the Capitol. They are products of the Leda-and-the-swan legend (maybe along with Clytemnestra and Helen of Troy). They are associated with horses (with which they are often portrayed); there was an important temple dedicated to them in the Roman Forum (the ruins are still there today). They were divinised through being made into a constellation—the Gemini of astrology.

The early Church saw Peter and Paul as the new twins of Christian Rome—its founders (like Romulus and Remus) and its patrons (like Castor and Pollux).

(Cosmas and Damian were another set of twins, with their church in the Forum, to take over the healing attributes of Castor and Pollux.) They are celebrated on the same day for this reason, for they did not (according to tradition) die on the same day, in the same place, or even in the same year. Peter is said to have been crucified upside down in an amphitheatre near the Vatican hill, outside the City and across the Tiber, and to have been buried in a nearby necropolis, over which St Peter’s Basilica was subsequently built. Paul is said to have been beheaded by the sword in a place on the way to Ostia, where there is now a Cistercian monastery with three churches, one of which, erected over the site of execution, is called “Tre Fontane” (three fountains), because Paul’s head, bouncing on the ground after removal, caused three springs of water to appear. Paul’s execution is associated in tradition with 29th June. He was buried further down the Road to Ostia, where the basilica known (in quaint English) as “St Paul-without-the-Walls” has been erected over his tomb.

The feast is important, then, because it celebrates the birth of a new Rome, the bishop of which is Successor of the Prince of the Apostles, Peter—but of Paul as well.

Social Justice

Putting People First: Unfortunately, the national debate on jobs growth has focused on this kind of low-wage flexibility. There has been little consideration of how we can invest in Australia's workforce by developing skills that will make the current and prospective workers more competitive in jobs that promise innovation, advanced production and better wages and conditions. A particular area of concern has been the strategy of recruiting increasing numbers of migrant workers to fill skills gaps in the economy. In the year to September 2013, the number of migrants on the 457 working visa grew by 12 per cent from 98,610 to 110,280. This increase was much higher than the 0.8 per cent growth in Australian employment. While there will always be a place for skilled migrant workers in Australia, the dramatic increase in such arrangements gives us an indication that our nation has not invested enough in the development of the domestic workforce.

Liturgical Colours: The Wearing of the Green

David E. Fedor

The Easter season has once again concluded. It's time to put away the festive white and gold vestments and sanctuary appointments. The exuberant music of the season is filed away until next Easter. We have the Solemnity of Ss Peter and Paul, today, and then our Sunday liturgies fall into Ordinary Time for about six months. The liturgical color for Ordinary Time is green.

Although most Catholics are aware that liturgical vestments come in a number of colors, many would be hard-pressed to explain what determines the use of one color over another. Up to the fourth century, white seems to be the only color used for liturgical vestments. After that, various records indicate that other colors were being used for liturgical seasons. By 1216, Pope Innocent III notes that the colors white, red, green, black, and violet were in use. To these officially recognised colors, blue, yellow, gray, and others were used in a number of local churches. By the middle of the 19th century, to bring the entire Western church into uniformity with the liturgy of Rome, the colors of vestments were decreed to be white, red, green, violet, and black. Gold and silver vestments were allowed for major festive celebrations. In 1969, the reformed liturgy of the Second Vatican Council clearly presented our current directives on liturgical colors and when to use them.

In the General Instruction of the Roman Missal (2003), we read: "The purpose of a variety in the color of the sacred vestments is to give effective expression even outwardly to the specific character of the mysteries of faith being celebrated and to a sense of the Christian life's passage through the course of the liturgical year" (345). Keeping this in mind, let us examine the colors, their traditional meaning, and their usage on our liturgies.

White is the most ancient and most common color of vestments. It signifies the brightness and intensity of light. It can represent innocence, purity, joy, and victory. It is therefore used during the Christmas and Easter seasons and on Holy Thursday, solemnities, feasts of our Lord, and Marian feasts. It is also used for the sacraments of baptism, Eucharist, marriage, and holy orders, and it is an option for the funeral liturgy.

Red is the color of fire and blood. Vestments of red are used to celebrate the passion of Christ on Passion (Palm) Sunday and Good Friday. It is also used on the feast days of the apostles and martyrs: those who sacrificed their lives in the name of the Lord. Red also recalls the descent of the Holy Spirit as tongues of fire, and it is therefore the color associated with Pentecost and the sacrament of confirmation.

Violet or purple is the ancient color of royalty and can refer to the power of Christ over sin and death. We have come to associate it with penance and renewal, believing that Christ is the one who redeemed us from sin and death. It is the color used during Advent, when we long for the coming of Christ, and in Lent, when we take time to repent and renew ourselves in preparation for the Triduum. Violet is also the color used for the sacraments of reconciliation and anointing of the sick. It is also the prescribed color for the offices of the dead, including the funeral Mass, although the option of white vestments is often selected for funerals because of its connection with eternal life.

Green, the color of trees and plants, is used in the liturgy to remind us to live out and grow into the mystery of life eternal as promised by Christ. A color of hope, green is used during the period we call Ordinary Time, which occurs twice in the liturgical year, first between the end of the Christmas season and Ash Wednesday, and then between Pentecost and Advent. The readings during these periods, filled with parables and various instructions for living the Christian life, are meant to keep us growing in the faith in between the two major Saints Peter and Paul worked tirelessly to spread the Gospel. Not all can be apostles, but we, too, must be good stewards of our vocations, using the gifts we've been given in the service of God's kingdom.

Liturgical Colours

seasons that celebrate the incarnation and redemption of Christ.

Black is associated with mourning, sorrow, and death. It was the color used for the offices of the dead, funerals, and the commemoration of All Souls. Once required, it is now only an option to violet and white.

Rose vestments may be used on the Third Sunday of Advent and Fourth Sunday of Lent. The color (halfway between violet and white) is a reminder that the season of Advent or Lent is half over and we are called to anticipate the joy of Christmas or Easter.

Gold, silver, and festive vestments can be substituted for white, red, or green on more solemn occasions. Christmas, Easter, and the anniversary of the foundation of a church are but a few of the appropriate times to wear the "finest we have."

Current regulations also recognise that, when appropriate, vestments may be adapted to suit the needs and cultures of various groups of people.

Vestments are an important part of our liturgy; their colors help us mark the passage of the liturgical year. Regardless of color, the vestments should contribute to the dignity, purpose, and beauty of the mysteries that we celebrate. ML
