I have come to bring fire.

Up the back of the university colleges, or on a trip up the East Coast, we see the blackened scars across the hills – reminders of the fires which raged through those areas last year – casting an unnerving pall of smoke over Hobart and the little towns of the East Coast.

But, as Australians living on the edges of heavily timbered country we all know that a fierce fire is one of the best things which can happen to a eucalyptus forest.

The seed pods burst open in the intense heat.

The fire cleanses the soil of smothering undergrowth and returns nutrients to the soil in the ashes.

The seeds have a chance to germinate in that soil.

It is that sort of fire which Jesus had in mind when he says "I have come to bring fire to the earth and I wish it were blazing already!"

What is the fire he is speaking of?

It turned out the "what" was not a "what" but a "who"!

The Holy Spirit was unleashed on the first Pentecost Sunday just like a lightning bolt in the South West Wilderness.

Recall that scene at Pentecost – the frightened and dispirited disciples huddled in a room like seeds in a pod putting a hard outer casing between themselves and a hostile world.

This might have given them some sense of security, but, so long as they stayed in that protective shell of a room, they were quite unable to realise their true destiny.

Then, what happened?

"Something appeared to them that seemed like tongues of fire ...They were all filled with the Holy Spirit" (Acts 2:2-3)

That fire – that divine fire – burst them out of the room and they began to preach the Resurrection and they realised their destiny as fearless disciples of our Risen Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

But this can have divisive consequences. At the extreme, following Our Lord, being baptised can mean total repudiation by members of one's family, and persecution by the society concerned. Especially in Muslim countries, like Malaysia, to become a Christian is to lose property and inheritance rights – the family is dismembered as one becomes a member of the Body of Christ. We should pray often for those who suffer this ostracising by their families and communities.

But, for us, what does it mean to be ignited by the divine flame?

What does this mean for the undergrowth of our lives?

You and I know, if we have had a few years on the planet, what are the actions or attitudes which stifle or smother our lives as fearless Christians.

Family expectations and stereotyped roles can be one. Our Lord himself experienced that so strongly at Nazareth – his home village – that he had to break away, never to return. He knew he had to be immersed (baptised) in the chaos of the outside world in order to conduct his ministry with power.

That is why he warns that for some disciples, following him with vigour and creativity may well mean breaking out of the little boxes which families can construct for their members – and that will cause division.

My dear friends, I love roses and dahlias and holly hocks and lupins and English country gardens. But, if we see ourselves as plants in such a garden, particularly if we see ourselves as plants in a walled garden, of course in that situation fire is a real threat and our natural inclination is to look to the hose to douse it.

But, we are Catholics, not roses or dahlias. We are little eucalyptus seeds. We need fire. We need the blazing fire of the Holy Spirit to allow who we truly are to burst forth.

Then, and only then, we have a chance to be

- not seeds which never break out of the pod of security or complacency

- not seedlings weakly dying in the bracken

- but we are meant to be glorious young trees reaching for the sun in all its glory.

Until at the end of history we together become a great stand of tall trees reaching for the risen Son in all his glory!

A Course in Morality and Ethics: Andrew Wood from St. John Centre for Biblical Studies will be running a course in Moral Theology. The Christian vocation to holiness is Christ's call for us to share in his own divine Sonship and divine life. In this course, we will study the meaning of this vocation, and how to effectively live it.

A rich young man once asked Jesus, "What must I do to inherit eternal life?" Jesus replied, "Keep the commandments" (Mt 19:16-17). This course is designed to explore the implications. Far from being an oppressive shackle, living the commandments actually grants us freedom and dignity. We will also look at the true nature of happiness and how to achieve it. We will look at sin, its consequence and how to overcome it. We will look at law and conscience and many more things associated with good morality. Monday, 22nd August to 26th September (6 Monday nights; 12 hours in total) 7-9pm each Monday night. St. Patrick's Parish, East Gosford (Primary School Library). Cost $120 (paid in full) first night. Sunday Readings

Bruce Janiga

20th Sunday in Ordinary Time, August 14

Jer 38:4–6, 8–10
Ps 39:2–4, 18 R. v.14
Heb 12:1–4
Lk 12:49–53

Tradition says that many of the prophets of biblical Israel suffered martyrdom because their words fell on unfriendly ears. In today's reading from Jeremiah, we hear that the prophet is thrown into a muddy cistern, left there to die because he predicts defeat for his nation. But his words are not his own; they come from God and must be spoken, despite the cost. It is through the intervention of a foreigner, Ebed-melech of Ethiopia, that the prophet is rescued. If you continue reading the text, you discover that Jeremiah does not stop preaching his words of destruction to the king and all who would listen.

The letter to the Hebrews reminds us, "Christ endured the cross ... / and has taken his seat at the right of the throne of God" (v 2). In light of his suffering at the hands of "sinners" (v 3), we too should anticipate that we will suffer. But we should not lose heart, for God is with us — we do not suffer alone.

Jesus' words in the Gospel today are not comforting: "I have come to set the earth on fire" (v 49). In the biblical mind, fire could destroy or purify. The picture Luke paints for us — father divided against son, and so on — reflects the situation in the early church. The gospel caused division among family members, as some embraced it but others rejected it and those who embraced it. Jesus reminds us that sometimes the gospel afflicts the comfortable, calling us to step out of our comfort zones. Jesus paid the ultimate price; we too might be called to suffer for the sake of the word.

For reflection: Am I "on fire" with my faith? How have I suffered for the sake of the word?

21st Sunday in Ordinary Time, August 14

Is 66:18–21
Ps 116. R. Mk 16:15
Heb 12:5–7, 11–13
Lk 13:22–30

Today's reading from Isaiah speaks of the Lord gathering all the nations: "They shall come and see my glory" (v 18). Writing to the citizens of Judah who have returned from exile and are restoring the city of Jerusalem, Isaiah envisions a time when the world will be gathered in God's holy city. In the next verses (not part of our reading), the focus shifts to a future time of glory and joy; God speaks of "the new heavens and the new earth which I will make" (v 22) and to which all the people of the earth will stream. Our prophet, referred to as Third Isaiah, anticipates a time when the Lord will renew all of creation. This theme is developed further in the imagery of the Book of Revelation.

The writer of the letter to the Hebrews reminds us that "whom the Lord loves, he disciplines" (v 6). Biblical Israel understood the Babylonian exile as God's punishment for their infidelity, from which they emerged with a stronger faith. We too are called to "make straight paths for [our] feet" (v 13), that we may be "healed" and walk in God's ways.

In the Gospel, Jesus encourages us to "enter through the narrow gate" (v 24). The path of discipleship is not always easy. Eating and drinking with him is not enough; we must seek to do his will. Those who respond appropriately to the invitation will come not only from among the children of Abraham but also "from the east and the west / and from the north and the south" (v 29). This image reflects what Third Isaiah spoke of centuries earlier and reminds us that God desires that all people be saved. God's love knows no bounds.

For reflection: Do I understand that God offers salvation to everyone? Have I ever had difficulty entering "through the narrow gate"? How did I respond to this difficulty?

In today's second reading, St. Paul encourages us not to grow weary or lose heart, but to persevere in following Jesus. Our willingness to give of ourselves, even in the face of conflict and division, is one way to measure our discipleship.

Homily © Richard Leonard SJ

In our desire to affirm that the scriptures are inspired, it can be easy to forget that they come out of the lived experience of a community of faith. Indeed, one of the things that is wonderful about our belief in God's revelation is that it occurs within human experience. Today's Gospel is an excellent example. Jesus predicts that one of the consequences of believing in him is that divisions will follow.

We can tell from the whole text of Luke's Gospel that these divisions were certainly a part of the earliest Christian community which wrote this book and that their faith in Christ led them to confront some very tough issues: how could Gentiles inherit the promises made to the Jews; why the rich members of the community had special responsibility to the poor; the centrality of forgiveness in the Christian life; and what leadership role women should have in the earliest Church. We know that fights over these issues and faith in Jesus as the Christ or the Messiah, divided families and villages, cities, nations and a religious tradition.

This gospel is both a stark reminder of the costs involved in following Jesus and a comfort to us in the church today. Sometimes we can domesticate the Christian community into a 'feel-good' society. Our religious words and actions, however, are always meant to have an edge; our faith should 'afflict the comfortable and comfort the afflicted'. If Christians at home, at work, in society and on the international stage just go along with what is trendy or current because we're frightened of conflict or because we want to be seen to be part of the crowd, then we are not worthy of this Gospel.

Sometimes when we hear Jesus use the metaphor of a blazing fire we can see a violent image, but I am not sure if it has to be exclusively interpreted this way. Fire is sometimes necessary and good to clear out the layers of undergrowth built up over time that smother the soil of a forest and prevent new growth. Fire is a beacon that gives guidance and attracts attention. A blazing fire can attract everyone to its light, warmth and power. So maybe this Gospel is a call to purge the weight of old growth that can stop fresh thinking. Maybe it gives guidance to us in the justice we are meant to live and the attention we must call to the needs of all God's children. And maybe it is a reminder that the life of our Christian community is meant to be attractive through its gentle power and warmth. If the price we pay for witnessing to any of these values is that we divide the crowd, so be it.

What's comforting about this gospel is that it recognises conflict as a necessary part of the Christian life. There are some who want to pretend that the followers of Jesus should never disagree with one another or with those outside the Church. Conflict in itself, Jesus teaches us today, is an element of our commitment to the kingdom of God. What marks out the way we should disagree with one another inside and outside the Church, however, is that it is conducted with charity, dignity, careful listening and compassion. Christians always look to put the best possible interpretation on the opinions of those with whom we disagree and to be reconciled to those we have hurt, to heal divisions where we can.

May this Eucharist give us the courage to divide the crowd for the right reasons. May we be a blazing fire that casts light on darkness where people are exploited and injustice smothers the growth Christ wants to see in the human family. No one promised us that Christian faith was ever going to be a picnic!
