Final River Kwai hero dies at 104

EXCLUSIVE by GWYN WRIGHT

THE last British soldier to have worked on the Bridge on the River Kwai has died aged 104.

Lyle "Horace" Hutley was captured in the fall of Singapore in 1942.

Japanese troops took him to Changi prison then made him work on the Burma rail bridge.

Lyle later told his niece how he had spent "three terrible years in the jungle, suffering torture and burying numerous pals".

Lyle, a gunner in the Royal Artillery Service Corps, weighed six stone when freed in 1945. He is believed to have suffered PTSD but returned to the camp "to forgive" in the 2000s.

He retired to Mildenhall, Suffolk, and died
